This report was made possible through a grant from the Jessie Ball duPont Fund. Attorney and former Center for Civil Rights intern Jennifer Watson Marsh was the principal author and researcher. Professors Tamar Birckhead and Barbara Fedders of the UNC School of Law Juvenile Justice Clinic provided invaluable insight, guidance, and support throughout this process. Salma S. Safiedine, staff attorney at the American Bar Association contributed additional research and information. Vivian Intermont’s study of North Carolina expungement was also an excellent and useful resource. Peter Gilbert, the Center’s Community Inclusion Attorney Fellow, assisted in editing the report.

The Center for Civil Rights would also like to thank Barbara Roole and Mark Constantine of the Jessie Ball duPont Fund, and UNC School of Law Dean Jack Boger, for their continued support for the Center and its social justice mission and advocacy.
Executive Summary

This report concentrates on the issue of juvenile delinquency adjudications, the collateral consequences of delinquency adjudications, and the process for expungement of juvenile adjudication records in Delaware, Florida, North Carolina, and Virginia. This report does not address general criminal convictions (which includes youthful offenders treated by the courts as adults), because of the fundamental differences between juvenile adjudications and criminal convictions.

The goal of the juvenile justice system is to reform, not punish, juveniles. This goal gives judges more latitude in fashioning a sentence for juveniles than they would have for an adult. In addition to punishment for the act, judges can require juveniles seek assistance in the form of counseling or treatment. Juvenile court also offers protections in the form of closed hearings and the fact records of the proceedings are not made available to the public. In each of the target states, adjudications are not considered convictions and juveniles are not considered criminals. The consequences of being adjudicated delinquent, while significant, are much less severe than being convicted guilty.

The differences between the adult and juvenile court system is reflected in the expungement process for each. It is generally much easier and relatively quicker to get an adjudication expunged than a conviction. Even so, there are very real consequences to a juvenile adjudication. A juvenile arrest or adjudication can result in an immediate impact on school attendance, driving privileges, and access to public housing. The severity of the impact varies by state but may result in negative consequences in all areas.

As a general rule, schools are notified of juvenile arrests and adjudications by law enforcement agencies. In most instances the school’s code of conduct allows the student to be disciplined in school for conduct that occurs outside of school hours and off of school grounds. Discipline can take the form of suspension, expulsion, or alternative school placement, any of which can affect the quality of the student’s education and impact access to higher education opportunities.

The impact of the discipline taken by the school continues to affect the student when he applies to colleges. Although the student does not have a criminal conviction (which would require disclosure), many college applications ask for information regarding any disciplinary action taken by a school and require details regarding the incident. Questions like these often lead to the dissemination of otherwise protected information regarding juvenile adjudications.

Public housing authorities can also take action against a juvenile or the family of a juvenile that was arrested or adjudicated delinquent. HUD regulations allow the local housing authority to terminate assistance to the entire family if any member of the household is a participant in drug-related or violent criminal activity. Each local housing authority can enact additional rules and policies of its own. Due to this practice, it is not unusual for an authority to have a rule where the actions of one family member or guest affect all the occupants of a unit. The result is that if a juvenile is arrested or adjudicated his entire family can be evicted from public housing or removed from the Section 8 program.
Non-citizens may experience additional collateral consequences. An arrest or adjudication is not considered a conviction and will not result in automatic deportation. Even so, some local officials take it upon themselves to notify federal authorities when a non-citizen is taken into custody. The adjudication could also come up during the naturalization process and work against the demonstration of good moral character.

None of the four states studied requires administrators of the juvenile justice system to notify juvenile offenders or their guardians of the collateral consequences of juvenile records or of the opportunity to expunge those records. In each of the states, a youth could have many interactions with the administrators of the juvenile courts, including his attorney, and not learn the potential ramifications of juvenile delinquency adjudications or that some relief may be available through the expungement process.

The following chart compares the expungement process in the four target states and looks at what information remains after the expungement:

 - In NC, youth are prosecuted as an adult after 16th birthday.
There are several key conclusions to draw from the survey of these four states:

- States should implement “Know Your Rights” policies, mandating notification of juveniles of both the scope and impact of potential collateral consequences of delinquency adjudication, as well as providing detailed information regarding the opportunity and process for expunging juvenile records.

- States should adopt policies that provide for the automatic expungement of juvenile adjudication records, with the goal of having such records expunged as early as possible. Many states that currently have automatic expungement delay the process long enough that an individual will likely have already been negatively impacted by the existence of the records by the time of the expungement.

- States should adopt policies and procedures to simplify and expedite the expungement process. Given the general lack of available legal representation to assist with expungement, states should ensure that interested individuals are able to navigate the process independently.

- State Bar Associations, attorneys, law schools and youth advocacy organizations should be encouraged and supported in developing pro bono projects and other programs to provide education around the impacts of juvenile adjudications and direct assistance in pursuing expungement of juvenile records.

- State legislative changes should be pursued to further limit the use, disclosure, or access to juvenile records, especially related to access to higher education. Many college and university applications currently include questions that require the applicant to reveal information that is otherwise protected as a juvenile record.

- Given the fundamental differences between the juvenile and the general criminal justice systems, and the intended protections and inherent rehabilitative nature of the former, additional legislative and judicial changes should be adopted to maximize the opportunities for youth to stay in the juvenile justice systems and not be moved into the criminal courts.

North Carolina, which prosecutes youth sixteen and older as adults, is a pointed example of this final point. There is no chance for individuals to remain in the juvenile justice system after age 16, and the results of this can be devastating. Advocates should seek statutory changes to limit or restrict circumstances which subject youth to be transferred to adult court, including revising age cut-offs.
Introduction

Collateral consequences of juvenile records can be severe and far reaching. This report analyzes the impacts of juvenile delinquency adjudications for youthful offenders in Delaware, Florida, North Carolina, and Virginia. The policies in each state differ regarding adjudications, possible collateral consequences of such adjudications, and the process for expungement of juvenile delinquency records. In light of these differences, each state is addressed separately.

A common theme among all four states examined however, is that although juvenile delinquency adjudications are not considered criminal convictions, they can have a lasting impact on the youthful offender. Youths with a juvenile record suffer significant hardships and there few laws or policies to mitigate the collateral consequences, which impact education, the ability to keep and to obtain a driver’s license, employment, and access to some public benefits.

Typically, juveniles do not learn about these barriers until they experience them directly. Current laws do not require any party in the juvenile justice system to inform juveniles of the possible consequences that result from arrests and juvenile delinquency adjudications.

There is also very little information about expungement provided to affected youth and very little assistance available to assist with the expungement process. Public defenders are not generally available, and as a result individuals must hire private representation or attempt to navigate the process themselves.

Information regarding the frequency of juvenile expungement is not easily obtainable if tracked at all. Anecdotal information indicates very few individuals petition the court for expungement. This is reinforced by the fact few attorneys are involved in expungement and very little case law regarding the process.\(^1\)

In each state some crimes result in juveniles being transferred to adult court and treated as adults. When a juvenile is convicted as an adult the protections associated with the juvenile justice process are lost. In these cases, the arrest and conviction information will be public knowledge. The expungement process for juvenile adjudication records, on which this research is focused, will not apply.\(^2\)

Immigration consequences should also be considered. A juvenile delinquency adjudication is not considered a conviction under federal immigration statutes and therefore should not result in automatic deportation. Although not required, it is the practice of some local officials to notify federal authorities when a non-citizen is taken into custody. The arrest or adjudication of a juvenile could also impact the finding of “good moral character” if the individual seeks citizenship.

For purposes of this analysis, “expungement” generally refers to the expungement of a juvenile adjudication record. In most states there is a separate, and much more restrictive process for the expungement or sealing of adult criminal records. In light of this greater burden, it is even more important that youthful offenders be adjudicated as juveniles if possible.

\(^2\) Convictions requiring registration on the sex offender registry fall into this category. The rules regarding the sex offender registry are complicated. Convictions of this kind are difficult if not impossible to have expunged. Due to that fact, information regarding these types of convictions was not addressed.
Delaware’s three Family Courts have jurisdiction over juvenile delinquency proceedings.\(^3\) Delaware Code ("Code") defines a "delinquent child" as a person less than eighteen years of age who commits an act which, if committed by an adult, would constitute a crime.\(^4\)

Similar to other states, juvenile delinquency adjudication is not considered a conviction and the youths should not be considered criminals.\(^5\) Juvenile delinquency proceedings are not criminal but civil proceedings.\(^6\) The Code states juvenile delinquency proceedings should focus on the interest of the child with the intention to rehabilitate the juvenile.\(^7\)

Delaware Code allows several instances where the state can proceed against the juvenile as an adult.\(^8\) This can occur when the child is charged with a serious felony, is a repeat offender, or when mandated by the General Assembly.\(^9\)

In these specified instances, prior to the case being transferred from Family Court, a preliminary hearing can be requested by either party to determine whether sufficient facts warrant proceeding.\(^10\) If a case is transferred to the Delaware Superior Court or other appropriate court for trial as an adult, there is still a possibility the case could be returned to Family Court.\(^11\) The return to Family Court is considered on a case by case basis.\(^12\) The seriousness of some charges will bar a return of the case to Family Court.\(^13\)

A juvenile can be prosecuted as an adult in several additional situations. One is when he is found not amenable to the Family Court’s rehabilitative processes.\(^14\) If the appropriateness of Family Court is questioned, the court will hold a hearing to determine whether the child is or is not amenable to Family Court’s rehabilitative processes.\(^15\)

A juvenile is prosecuted as an adult if it has been previously determined that the child is not amenable to the rehabilitative process of Family Court or the child has applied to move a case from Superior Court to Family Court in the past.\(^16\) Each of these instances results in Superior Court having jurisdiction over the individual in all future cases. The final situation is when a child over fifteen years old is charged with a felony-level offense while attempting to escape from certain juvenile facilities. In each situation a hearing is held to determine whether to transfer the case to Superior Court.

Notification of Collateral Consequences of Juvenile Records

The Delaware Code does not require administrators of the juvenile justice system to notify juvenile offenders or their guardians of any collateral consequences of juvenile records or the opportunity for expungement of those records. A youth could have many interactions with the juvenile court administrators, including his attorney, and not learn the potential ramifications of juvenile delinquency adjudication or that some relief may be available through the expungement process.

Treatment of Juvenile Delinquency Records

Although Delaware Code indicates that juvenile delinquency adjudications are not convictions, the records for children are treated similarly to those of an adult. Under Delaware Code, the Family Court or pertinent law enforcement entity will release the name and address of the youth and the name of the youth’s parents for a felony-level offense, when a child, regardless of age, is arrested, convicted, or acquitted, or for Class A misdemeanors, for a child aged thirteen to seventeen who is arrested, convicted, or acquitted, upon request by the media.

In Delaware, criminal history record information includes findings of juvenile delinquency and adult criminal information. This means that information regarding juvenile delinquency adjudications falls under the rules concerning dissemination of criminal history record information.

The State Bureau of Identification stores criminal history records information, which includes various data about arrests, charges, and dispositions of cases. The Code indicates that criminal records are closed to public scrutiny but there are defined exceptions outlining when the State Bureau of Identification may release criminal history record information (CHRI) and what information can be disseminated to the indicated entities. Entities that could be allowed to access CHRI include criminal justice agencies, individuals with a personal record, attorneys and state public defenders, and entities authorized by law, including researchers, media, and governmental agencies with user agreements allowing access or with statutory mandate. The broad exceptions to the rule allow a great number of people access to juvenile delinquency adjudication records.

Sealing and Expunging Juvenile Delinquency Records

Juveniles who were adjudicated delinquent or charged with delinquency may attempt to have their arrest records and criminal history information expunged by petitioning Family Court. Delaware Code states that the expungement of a juvenile record results in destruction of the entire file including:

fingerprints and photographs. Discretion remains with the courts to determine if they will grant the petition.

Expungement of a juvenile record is allowed in two situations. The first situation is when three years have passed from the date of the delinquency adjudication, and there have been no additional adjudications against the youth. Subsequent adult offenses could be considered a subsequent adjudication and bar the expungement of juvenile record. The second situation is when the youth was charged or arrested but the charges were dismissed, dropped, disposed of through arbitration, or otherwise disposed of without the child being adjudicated delinquent.

Not all juvenile records can be considered for expungement. The Delaware Code does not allow the expungement of juvenile delinquency records of adjudications for second degree murder, first degree arson, or first degree burglary.

A person seeking to expunge their record must obtain private representation or represent themselves as the Delaware Public Defender’s Office does not represent juvenile expungement cases.

A person with a juvenile adjudication record generally must wait three years before bringing a juvenile expungement petition, provided that the juvenile has not had a subsequent adjudication. The three year waiting period is waived if the individual is seeking the expungement in order to enlist in the U.S. armed forces. The waiting period also does not apply if the charges brought did not result in the individual being adjudicated delinquent. A sample petition for expungement of a juvenile record can be found on the Delaware Family Court website and is included in the Appendix.

The Delaware Code provides judges with guidance on determining whether to grant petitions for expungement. The Code indicates if there is no objection and no reason not to grant the expungement, it may be granted. In cases in which juveniles were not adjudicated delinquent, the judge should consider the best interest of the child and the State when making the determination regarding the petition. A judge may consider many factors, including the seriousness of the juvenile offense, any psychological evaluations of the petitioner, the petitioner’s age at the time of the juvenile offense, and the petitioner’s reason for requesting the expungement.

Statutory language indicates that an expunged record will be completely destroyed and therefore not be available for access. Nevertheless, the Delaware Code addresses the when expunged criminal records may be disclosed. The rules permit disclosure of expunged records to law enforcement officers for the purposes of investigating felony crimes and applications for law enforcement agencies. It is unclear if this provision relates to expunged juvenile delinquency records as well. Juvenile records are not considered criminal records by definition and so may not be included in this exception. Currently there is not a statute or case law that directly addresses the issue, but one may conclude that the state retains at least one copy of the expunged record.

Employment Opportunities

Juvenile delinquency adjudication information may be accessed by certain entities for employment purposes. There are broad rules in the Delaware Code outlining when the State Bureau of Identification may distribute CHRI and what information it can distribute. Juvenile delinquency adjudications fall within the Code’s definition of CHRI. The specific circumstances in which the Bureau is permitted to distribute certain CHRI for employment purposes vary depending on the type of employment.

Employers without a statutory mandate for criminal history information are not likely to be able to obtain juvenile delinquency adjudication information. Delaware Code states the Bureau may provide information pertaining to the identification and conviction data of any person to agencies and individuals for the purpose of employment.” As discussed previously, juvenile delinquency adjudications are not considered convictions so the information should not be released pursuant to this Code provision.

The policy is different for employment in professions with a statutory mandate for criminal history record information. For these entities, the Bureau may forward a report of the individual’s entire criminal history record information when the individual is seeking employment or licensure in a field in which it is statutorily required. The entity must properly request the information and include a copy of the individual’s fingerprints as well as other required information.

A broad range of categories of employment mandate disclosure of the applicant’s entire criminal history record, including public school employment, child care employment, employment in a nursing

37 The Code describes the relief available for juvenile expungement petitions as follows:

- Del. Code Ann. tit. 10, § 1001(a) (2010): “[A]n order directing an expunging from the records of all evidence of such adjudication upon the status of any such child and the destruction of all indicia of arrest including fingerprints and photographs . . .” (This Code language is included in the discussion of no-subsequent-adjudication cases.)
- Del. Code Ann. tit. 10, § 1001(c) (2010): “[A]n order may be granted directing the Clerk of the Court to expunge from the records all evidence of such adjudication . . . further directing that all indicia of arrest including fingerprints and photographs be destroyed.”

In addition, the sample petition on the Family Court of the State Delaware website lists relief that a petitioner can request of the Court. This includes: “indicium arrest, fingerprints, photographs and police records...” (Family Court of the State of Delaware, Petition for Expungement of Juvenile Record, http://courts.delaware.gov/forms/download.aspx?ID=387 (last visited October 19, 2010).)

home or similar facility, and employment with home health service provider. Applications for licenses and certifications which require a check of the applicant’s entire criminal history record include a nursing license, a nursing home administrator license, an ambulance attendant and emergency medical technician certification, or an emergency medical technician-paramedic certification.

When completing applications for jobs and licenses, juveniles should answer truthfully, keeping in mind that juvenile delinquency adjudications are not considered convictions. This allows an individual to truthfully answer they do not have prior criminal convictions. As previously noted however, depending on the situation, the entity may be able to access the individual’s entire criminal history record information which could contain information regarding juvenile delinquency adjudications.

Collateral Consequences Affecting Elementary & Secondary Education Students

Juvenile delinquency charges, adjudications, criminal charges, or convictions can affect an individual’s elementary or secondary education. The consequences may vary depending on whether the incident precipitating the charges occurred on or off school grounds.

Crimes committed on school grounds can have immediate consequences. If police find probable cause to believe a child committed a crime at school the student must be immediately suspended and referred to alternative services. This includes holding a parent conference to review the child’s placement and determination of the appropriate nature and duration of alternative services. Crimes considered felonies, misdemeanors, or violations trigger this response, as well as conduct which would be considered a felony, misdemeanor, or violation if it had been committed by an adult. A youth found with a weapon in a safe school and recreation zone must be expelled for a minimum of 180 days although this may be modified by the local school board on a case-by-case basis.

Conduct that occurs off school grounds can also be considered for disciplinary action by school officials if the act threatens the health and safety of those in school. Schools have been allowed to discipline students for off school drug purchases and acts which could be interpreted as threatening students.

Many times schools find out about students’ out of school crimes through the Delaware Attorney General (AG). The AG reports any serious crimes committed off school grounds directly to school superintendents. Some schools indicate in their student code of conduct that these off school crimes will be subject to the same disciplinary actions as crimes committed on school grounds.

Students wishing to challenge their punishment must appeal to the local school board, which has the authority to review any controversies relating to student suspensions or expulsions. Students may then appeal the decision to the Delaware State Board of Education. It is more difficult for a student to get relief at this level as the state board will overturn the local board’s decision only if it was “contrary to a specific state or federal law or regulation, was not supported by substantial evidence, or was arbitrary or capricious.”

Access to state higher education can be negatively affected by juvenile delinquency adjudications as well. Several applications for state higher education in Delaware request information about the applicant’s criminal history. If the application inquires about convictions, individuals do not need to indicate information regarding juvenile delinquency adjudications. However, information regarding adjudications is sometimes disclosed nonetheless, through application questions regarding school discipline.

Both Delaware State University and University of Delaware inquire as to if the applicant has ever been suspended or expelled from school. If the applicant answers affirmatively, he must provide the dates and specific circumstances of each incident. Candidly fulfilling this requirement could result in disclosing information regarding a juvenile arrest or adjudication.

Collateral Consequences to Public Benefits & Privileges

Several public benefits and privileges can be negatively affected by adjudications. The privilege of obtaining or keeping a driver’s license may be directly and quickly impacted. Other consequences, such as potential issues with becoming a foster parent or adopting, could arise many years later.

Obtaining or keeping a driving license or permit may be severely impacted by a juvenile delinquency adjudication. Upon adjudicating a juvenile delinquent, Delaware code allows the Family Court to order the Motor Vehicle Division of the Department of Transportation to revoke or suspend the individual’s driving privileges, postpone the individual’s eligibility to obtain driving privileges, or attach all traffic, alcohol, and/or drug adjudications on the individual’s driving record for up to four years.

If the youth is adjudicated delinquent for driving under the influence (DUI), Family Court is required to revoke or suspend the child’s driving privileges until the youth turns twenty-one. There is one exception to this revocation or suspension. If after six months the individual completes a rehabilitation and education course and is able to show a critical need for the driving privileges, the court may grant restricted driving privileges. 68

Juveniles adjudicated delinquent for driving without a license will not be able to obtain a driver’s permit or a driver’s license until one year from the date of the adjudication or until the juvenile turns seventeen, whichever is later. 69

Under the Delaware Code, an investigation must be conducted into any individual interested in becoming prospective adoptive and foster parents. 70 The Delaware Department of Services for Children, Youth and their Families determines the suitability of prospective parents after reviewing their entire criminal history record, which could include juvenile delinquency adjudications. 71 Under Delaware regulations, any convictions for sexually-related offenses or offenses against children are a bar to adoption. 72

Perhaps most significantly, an individual with a juvenile record can disqualify his household from public housing. The local housing authorities are required to screen applicants for federally assisted housing, including performing a criminal history background check. 73 Federally assisted housing bans anyone from admission who is subject to a lifetime sex offender registration requirement. 74

Local housing authorities may also prohibit admission to public housing or Section 8 subsidy programs if any household member has, or is currently engaged in, drug-related or violent criminal activity or criminal activity that may threaten the health, safety, or right to peaceful enjoyment of the premises by other residents or persons residing in the immediate vicinity. 75 The local housing authority only has the ability to obtain juvenile records as they may only be obtained by court order. 76

A juvenile already living in public housing that is arrested or adjudicated could terminate the family’s participation in the public housing or Section 8 subsidy program. Public housing authorities have the right to evict families of delinquent children if the household member engages in criminal activity that is violent, drug-related, or “threatens the health, safety or right to peaceful enjoyment of other residents and persons” living within the vicinity of the premises. 77 This applies regardless of where the delinquent conduct occurs and it does not matter if the other tenants had knowledge of the activity. 78

NOTE: the above-described collateral consequences related to public housing are based on HUD regulations, and thus apply equally in all the states discussed in this report. While there may be minor variation in the specific enforcement protocols utilized by local housing authorities subject to these regulations, these critical impacts will not be restated for each state subsequently discussed.

Virginia criminal offenders are considered juveniles if the offender is under 18 years old at the time of the offense. Virginia’s Juvenile and Domestic Relations District Courts (JDR courts) handle the juvenile cases. The JDR courts are broken up into jurisdictions by county or city. The JDR court may sentence an individual over eighteen years old for a crime committed prior to the individual’s eighteenth birthday. In such cases the court may impose the sentence applicable to adults for such violations, but it may not exceed the sentence for a Class 1 misdemeanor. If an individual turns twenty-one years old and prosecution for a juvenile offense has not occurred, the individuals will be tried as an adult.

Virginia Code defines a “delinquent child” as a child who has committed a delinquent act, or an adult who has committed a delinquent act prior to his eighteenth birthday, unless the juvenile court has terminated jurisdiction by transferring the case to circuit court. A “delinquent act” is defined as the commission of any act designated a crime under the law of the Commonwealth, federal law, or an ordinance of any city, county, town, or service district, including some violations of a court order, and transportation or possession by a juvenile of a firearm. Proceedings against juveniles in the JDR courts are civil, not criminal. Virginia Code indicates that a finding of delinquency does not impose the civil disabilities ordinarily imposed by conviction for a crime. Although not considered a criminal conviction, there are serious collateral consequences to a juvenile adjudication.

In some cases juveniles can be tried as adults in circuit court. There are four prerequisites that must be met before a case is eligible for transfer: the youth must be at least fourteen years old at the time of the offense, adequate notice of the charges must be provided to the youth and his parents, the juvenile court judge or grand jury must find probable cause that the youth committed the offense, and the youth must be competent to stand trial. Competency is presumed but can be challenged in JDR court before the case is transferred to circuit court.

Virginia Code lists several ways for a juvenile to be transferred from JDR court to circuit court. These are legislative certification, prosecutorial certification, judicial discretion transfer, direct indictment, and waiver of juvenile court jurisdiction.

Legislative Certification occurs when a juvenile is charged with one of the acts the state has identified for transfer to circuit court: capital murder, first or second degree murder, murder by lynching, or aggravated malicious wounding. The juvenile has a preliminary hearing in JDR court to determine if the four prerequisites for transfer have been met. If the prerequisites are met, the juvenile is automatically certified and the case sent to circuit court for the juvenile to be treated as an adult.

Prosecutorial Certification occurs if the juvenile is charged with one of many applicable felonies. The prosecutor can request a preliminary hearing in JDR court. If the four prerequisites for transfer are met and probable cause is found, the case is certified to circuit court.

Judicial Discretion Transfer applies for any crime that does not fall under the prior two categories but would be considered a felony if committed by an adult. The prosecutor asks the JDR court judge to transfer the juvenile to circuit court. A report is submitted to the judge indicating factors he must consider, including age, seriousness or offense, prior juvenile record, mental capacity, and a recommendation from the probation officer regarding whether the case should be transferred.

A full hearing is held in JDR court with evidence from both sides. After the hearing, a judge determines if the case should remain in juvenile court or be transferred to circuit court. Transfer decisions made at the discretion of the JDR court may be appealed.

Virginia Code allows the attorney for the Commonwealth to seek direct indictment in the circuit court on the offense if the juvenile court does not find probable cause. This option is a bypass to the judge’s ruling in the judicial discretion transfer.

The final way a case can be transferred from JDR court to circuit court is if the juvenile waives juvenile court jurisdiction. This can be done if the juvenile is at least fourteen years old, charged with an offense that would be a felony if committed by an adult and he has the written consent of counsel.

If a juvenile’s case is transferred to circuit court, he is tried in the same manner as adults but may be sentenced by the judge instead of a jury. Judges may sentence youth transferred to circuit court to either juvenile or adult sentences. Virginia Code indicates that if the juvenile is convicted in circuit court, the JDR court shall not have jurisdiction over any subsequent offenses committed by that juvenile or any pending allegations of delinquency that had not been disposed of by the juvenile court at the time of the criminal conviction. If the juvenile is not convicted in circuit court, jurisdiction over that juvenile is returned to the juvenile court for any future alleged delinquent or criminal behavior.

Notification of Collateral Consequences of Juvenile Records

The Virginia Code does not require administrators of the juvenile justice system to notify juvenile offenders or their guardians of the collateral consequences of juvenile records. A youth could have many interactions with juvenile court administrators, including his attorney, and not learn the ramifications of a juvenile adjudication.

Most juvenile records in Virginia are automatically expunged after a period of time has passed. For those records that are not automatically expunged, there is no requirement to inform the juvenile offenders or their guardians of the opportunity to apply for expungement of those records.

A defendant must know the direct consequences of a guilty plea in order to enter a knowing and voluntary guilty plea. Direct consequences are defined as “those having a 'definite, immediate and largely automatic effect on the range of the defendant’s punishment.’” Conversely, there is no requirement to notify the juvenile of any collateral consequences even in order to enter a guilty plea in a delinquency adjudication.

Treatment of Juvenile Delinquency Records

In some cases, prior juvenile adjudications can trigger harsher punishments in sentencing for circuit court convictions. Under Virginia Code some juvenile adjudications are considered during sentencing for later criminal convictions. Specifically, the penalty for driving while intoxicated with a prior conviction and possession of firearms by a convicted felon, both can include consideration of juvenile adjudications.

Harsher sentencing can also apply through the discretionary sentencing guidelines. Virginia Code indicates that “previous convictions shall include prior adult convictions and juvenile convictions and adjudications of delinquency based on an offense which would have been at the time of conviction a felony if committed by an adult under the laws of any state, the District of Columbia, the United States or its territories.” The Code allows juries to also consider juvenile records in sentencing by mandating that the prosecutor present the defendant’s prior criminal history including juvenile adjudications.

The collection of DNA, fingerprints, and photographs is another collateral consequence of having a juvenile record. DNA is routinely collected for felonies and felony-type offenses. DNA samples must be given by any juvenile fourteen years old or older who is adjudicated delinquent of a crime that would be a felony if committed by an adult. The DNA is stored by the Department of Forensic Science for the same time and manner that adult samples are stored.

Fingerprints and photographs are also collected for felony and felony-type offenses. Virginia’s Central Criminal Records Exchange (CCRE) maintains reports on all felonies, felony-type offenses, and most Class 1 and 2 misdemeanors. Whether a report is required to be made to CCRE depends on the crime, not the age of the offender. Juveniles adjudicated delinquent of an offense that requires the CCRE to maintain a report must have a report made regardless of the juvenile’s age.\textsuperscript{114} The reports contain copies of fingerprints and information regarding the disposition of the case among other information.\textsuperscript{115}

CCRE maintains juvenile records separately from the adult records. Records containing the fingerprints and photographs of juveniles must be destroyed after sixty days if a petition or warrant is not filed.\textsuperscript{116} Additionally, if a juvenile is found not guilty of the offense or if the case results in a disposition that does not require the records, CCRE must destroy the records within six months.\textsuperscript{117}

In some cases a juveniles’ arrest data could be made public. Generally, juvenile law enforcement records are open to the public only when the child is at least fourteen years old and has been charged with a violent juvenile felony.\textsuperscript{118} All other juvenile law enforcement records are not open to the public and must be maintained in a confidential manner to prevent them from being disclosed.\textsuperscript{119}

A chief of police or sheriff may share information regarding juvenile suspects or charges against a juvenile with a school principal but if he chooses to do so, he has a duty to also inform the school principal of the final disposition of the case.\textsuperscript{120}

JDR Court maintains paper and electronic files for all juvenile offenders in their independent database system in addition to the files maintained at each courthouse.\textsuperscript{121} It is difficult to determine who can access juvenile arrest and court records as the law frequently changes. The legislature of Virginia often takes up the issue the confidentiality of juvenile records. To determine the current state of the law, check the Virginia Code for exceptions to the confidentiality of juvenile records.

In general, juvenile court files are considered confidential and access to the files is limited.\textsuperscript{122} Virginia statutes identify specific entities that may access juvenile court records including: the parties to the proceedings and their attorneys;\textsuperscript{123} the judge, probation officers and court staff involved in the hearing;\textsuperscript{124} any agency providing services for a juvenile that is ordered or requested by the court;\textsuperscript{125} any other person, agency or institution, by order of the court, having a legitimate interest in the case or in the work of the court;\textsuperscript{126} any attorney for the Commonwealth, local pretrial services or community-based probation officer, or state adult probation or parole officer for the strictly limited purposes of preparing a pretrial investigation report, presentence report, discretionary sentencing guidelines worksheets, post-sentence investigation report, or preparing for any transfer or sentencing hearing;\textsuperscript{127} and the Office of the Attorney General, for all criminal justice activities otherwise permitted.\textsuperscript{128}

Once a final disposition has been made, the clerk of the court is required to notify the superintendent of schools of the outcome of the case. The superintendent is also allowed to request

Expunging Delinquency Files or Records

Virginia has an automatic process whereby the court records of juvenile proceedings are automatically destroyed if the juvenile is nineteen years old or older and five years have passed since the last hearing in any case involving the juvenile. Records reported to the Department of Motor Vehicles are destroyed automatically when the juvenile reaches twenty-nine years old. The automatic destruction of records pertains only to cases where the individual was tried as a juvenile; automatic destruction does not occur if the juvenile was fourteen years of age or older and found guilty of a felony delinquent act or is found guilty of a felony in circuit court. If the juvenile is convicted of a felony or adjudicated delinquent for an act that requires a report to the CCRE, there is no automatic expungement of the juvenile record in the CCRE.

If a person’s juvenile record does not fall into the categories of those automatically destroyed, the person may petition the court to have juvenile records expunged. Expungement will be considered only if the individual was acquitted, in the case of a nolle prosequi (decision to cease further prosecution), or the charges were “otherwise dismissed.” Furthermore, under these limited circumstances, a person seeking expungement need not wait five years. The court shall enter the order of expungement if the petitioner has no prior criminal record and the arrest was for a misdemeanor unless good cause is shown by the Commonwealth why the motion should not be granted. In all other situations, the court must deny the petition, with the exception of a finding by the court “that the continued existence and possible dissemination of information relating to the arrest of the petitioner causes or may cause circumstances which constitute a manifest injustice to the petitioner.”

There is limited access to an expunged record. A court may review the expunged record “upon a verified petition filed by the attorney for the Commonwealth alleging that the record is needed by a law-enforcement agency for purposes of employment application as an employee of a law-enforcement agency or for a pending criminal investigation and that the investigation will be jeopardized or that life or property will be endangered without immediate access to the record.” No other access to the expunged record is authorized.

By law applicants cannot be required by employers, educational institutions, or state and local government officials to disclose information regarding an expunged record on an application for employment, admission, licensure, permitting, registration, or for any other government services. Virginia Code goes on to state that, “an applicant need not, in answer to any question concerning any arrest or criminal charge that has not resulted in a conviction, include a reference to or information concerning arrests or charges that have been expunged.\textsuperscript{139}

Once a record is expunged, the individual is afforded protections to keep information regarding the adjudication from being disclosed. A significant problem with the automatic expungement process however, is that it comes too late for many people. By the time the record is expunged the individual’s life has often been negatively impacted by the existence of the juvenile delinquency record. An individual likely has applied to colleges or sought employment prior to having the record expunged. In many instances, information regarding the juvenile adjudication may have been disclosed on applications.

Employment Opportunities

In general, access to juvenile records is limited and could not be accessed by an employer.\textsuperscript{140} Juvenile adjudications are not considered criminal convictions so the record does not need to be revealed on applications requesting information about convictions.\textsuperscript{141} There are limited circumstances under which an employer may obtain information about juvenile court involvement.

Criminal records are available regarding juveniles adjudicated delinquent on adult felony crimes or tried as adults. These records are open to the public unless the judge has ordered the record remain confidential to protect either a juvenile victim or juvenile witness. The employer may file a form with the CCRE to request the criminal records with the prospective employee’s written consent.\textsuperscript{142}

There is a special exception to the confidential nature of juvenile records with respect to employment with businesses and organizations providing care to children, the elderly and the disabled. These employers may request a national criminal background check on prospective employees.\textsuperscript{143} The employer will be notified if the individual has been convicted of any of the thirty felonies or two misdemeanors covered by the background check regardless of age at the time of the offense.\textsuperscript{144} Conviction of one of the listed crimes disqualifies the individual from working in this type of employment.\textsuperscript{145}

Employers cannot view juvenile records that have been expunged. Also, the employer cannot require the applicant to disclose criminal records that have been expunged.\textsuperscript{146} Expunged juvenile records are treated as through the incident did not occur.\textsuperscript{147}

Individuals should always tell the truth on employment applications. Generally applications only ask about convictions, not arrests. Juvenile delinquency findings are not considered convictions and should not be disclosed if the application requests information about convictions. If an individual is asked about his arrest record and that record has been expunged, he need not include any information regarding the record.\textsuperscript{148}

Complaints or charges brought against a juvenile can affect the individual’s elementary or secondary education. In Virginia, intake officers are required to notify the school division’s superintendent of a juvenile’s charges if those charges would be a felony if committed by an adult, regardless of where the crime is committed.\textsuperscript{149}

If charges are brought against a juvenile involving weapons, alcohol, drug offenses, or intentionally injuring another, the school may be allowed to place the student in an alternative education program without an adjudication of guilt.\textsuperscript{150} If a student has certain types of charges pending, JDR courts are authorized to require a student to attend an alternative education program.\textsuperscript{151} Additionally, a student may be suspended for up to ten days pending a decision to place the student in an alternative program if he is charged with certain offenses.\textsuperscript{152}

If a juvenile is adjudicated delinquent or admits to committing a crime, there are additional potential impacts on his elementary or secondary education. Under Virginia Code, a student can be placed in an alternative education program if the student is found guilty or not innocent of an offense related to homicide, weapons or firearms, felonious assault, criminal sexual assault, controlled substances, arson, burglary, robbery, criminal street gang activity or recruitment, alcohol, or any crime that resulted or could have resulted in injury to another.\textsuperscript{153}

As mentioned earlier, if a student is convicted or adjudicated delinquent of certain serious offenses, the clerk of court must provide notice to schools, and schools may take disciplinary action including suspension or expulsion from school.\textsuperscript{154} If the school chooses to take no disciplinary action, the notice from the clerk of court must be kept separate from the student’s disciplinary record.\textsuperscript{155} Parents must be notified of any disciplinary action the school decides to take against the student as a result of the adjudication or conviction.\textsuperscript{156} A school cannot take disciplinary action against a juvenile for any record that has been expunged. Expunged records are treated as if the incident never occurred and therefore separate action based on such records cannot be taken by the school.\textsuperscript{157}

If a student is suspended, expelled, or transferred to an alternative education program there is some recourse available. Students are given notice of the punishment and the opportunity for a hearing in each situation. The procedures the student must follow are specific to the punishment received. The more serious punishments have a more formal hearing process and additional opportunities for review of the final decision.\textsuperscript{158}

There are sometimes collateral consequences affecting access to state higher education for a juvenile that has been adjudicated delinquent or changed with a crime. Access to Virginia’s community

The policy to inquire about criminal charges or delinquency adjudications varies among four-year colleges in Virginia. The Common Application, used by some schools, requires students to disclose and explain any past disciplinary violations, misdemeanors, felonies, or other crimes. Colleges not using the Common Application may also require disclosure of criminal charges or delinquency adjudications. Colleges vary greatly in how they consider the information. Some weigh it as one factor among many, while one institution has a committee that steps through a structured process for determining the seriousness of the charges and adjudications. Many colleges and universities across the country expanded their inquiry into prior delinquent activity after the Virginia Tech shootings in 2007.

Collateral Consequences to Receipt of Public Benefits & Privileges

Several public benefits and privileges can be negatively affected by adjudications. Collateral consequences to obtaining or keeping a driver’s license are usually obvious and immediate. Other consequences, such as issues with becoming a foster parent or adopting, arise many years later.

Juveniles adjudicated delinquent must obtain written approval from the court in order to obtain a driver’s license. Juveniles will likely lose their driver’s license or permit when they are adjudicated delinquent for theft or unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, for driving under the influence, or for causing serious bodily injury including homicide. Additionally, certain drug offenses can result in the revocation of a juvenile’s license for six months. Unlawfully possessing alcohol will also result in a juvenile having his license revoked.

Under Virginia Code, an adult with a juvenile record containing an adjudication of delinquency may be prevented from becoming a foster parent or adopting a child. A juvenile conviction or adjudication that would have constituted a felony if committed by an adult even outside the Commonwealth generally bars fostering or adopting. There are several exceptions to the rule for crimes including burglary, breaking and entering, and drug possession, if the required number of years has passed since conviction.

\textbf{NORTH CAROLINA}

\textit{Understanding the Justice System}

The Juvenile Code governs North Carolina’s juvenile justice system.\textsuperscript{173} The state’s Department of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (the Department), consulting with Chief District Judges, is charged with designating local agencies with the authority to share juveniles’ information.\textsuperscript{174}

In North Carolina, juveniles are divided into two classes, “undisciplined juveniles” and “delinquent juveniles.”\textsuperscript{175} Juvenile cases are considered adjudications, not convictions.\textsuperscript{176} The term “undisciplined juvenile” is applied to a child who is at least six years old and less than sixteen and is found by a court to be unlawfully absent from school, regularly disobedient and beyond the disciplinary control of the parent or guardian, to have run away from home for more than twenty-four hours, or who is regularly found in restricted places.\textsuperscript{177} Sixteen or seventeen years olds who commit any of the listed activities, with the exception of being absent from school, may also be considered “undisciplined juveniles.”\textsuperscript{178} A “delinquent juvenile” is a child between six and sixteen years of age who violates a local ordinance or state law, motor vehicle law, or is held in contempt of court.\textsuperscript{179} Individuals who commit criminal acts after their sixteenth birthday or after they are emancipated, are prosecuted as adults.\textsuperscript{180}

All juvenile proceedings must be completed prior to the individual turning eighteen years old. Once the juvenile turns eighteen or is emancipated, he can be transferred to adult court.\textsuperscript{181} A hearing is held to determine probable cause and transfer to superior court.\textsuperscript{182} The court may transfer the case to superior court if the juvenile was at least thirteen at the time of an alleged felony offense.\textsuperscript{183} If the court finds probable cause to believe the child committed a class A felony, transfer to adult court is mandatory.\textsuperscript{184} If a juvenile is transferred to adult court, any subsequent offenses will be heard there as well.\textsuperscript{185} The scope and impact of collateral consequences in North Carolina depends on whether the minor is adjudicated in juvenile court or prosecuted as an adult.

Notification of Collateral Consequences of Juvenile Records

North Carolina does not require any member of the juvenile justice system to notify adjudicated youth about the collateral consequences or potential dissemination of their juvenile records or the opportunity for expungement of those records. A child could proceed through the court system interacting with the judge, district attorney, his defense attorney, and probation officers without ever learning the potential impact of the collateral consequences associated with having a juvenile record or that some relief may be available through the expungement process.

Treatment of Juvenile Records

A juvenile at least ten years old will be fingerprinted and photographed if accused of committing a non-divertible offense.\textsuperscript{186} Non-divertible offenses include murder, first or second degree rape, first or second degree sexual offenses, arson, felony drug offenses, first degree burglary, crimes against nature, and any felony involving willful infliction of serious bodily injury upon another or committed by use of a deadly weapon.\textsuperscript{187} Juveniles adjudicated delinquent for a felony offense will also be fingerprinted and photographed.\textsuperscript{188}

The Department maintains a database of arrest information called the North Carolina Juvenile Online Information Network (NCJOIN).\textsuperscript{189} It includes papers filed in the juvenile proceeding such as the summons, petition, custody orders, recordings of hearings, and any motions or orders.\textsuperscript{189} Often these documents contain the juvenile’s personal and contact information as well as details of charges.\textsuperscript{190} Each county courthouse also maintains records of the proceedings. A new juvenile court record database called JWise is currently being implemented.\textsuperscript{191}

Juvenile records require a court order for the public to access them.\textsuperscript{192} The public may not otherwise access arrest information including fingerprints and photographs.\textsuperscript{193} However, limited information on offenders aged ten to seventeen is available from the Department of Corrections through the North Carolina Offender Information Service on-line search engine.\textsuperscript{194}

Sealing and Expunging Delinquency Files or Records

Juveniles can ask to have a record sealed or expunged. It is unlikely an individual would be appointed counsel for this purpose as public defenders are only appointed for adjudication proceedings.\footnote{\textit{See generally} N.C. GEN. STAT. §§ 7B-3000-3001, 7B-3200-3202 (2009).}

Juvenile court records can be sealed by court order, which would then require a judge to issue another court order for the record to be viewed.\footnote{N.C. GEN. STAT. § 7B-3000(c) (2009).} Sealing a record does not guarantee it will not be accessed in the future. The record may still be used in future criminal proceedings or sentencing for certain felony offenses.\footnote{\textit{Id.}} Sealed files may also be used to determine pretrial release or negotiating a plea agreement.

Employment Opportunities

Juvenile records are not publicly available and therefore not generally available to employers. Juvenile adjudications are not considered convictions and therefore do not need to be revealed on job applications requesting information regarding convictions.\textsuperscript{213}

Collateral Consequences Affecting Elementary & Secondary Education Students

In North Carolina, juvenile records may be shared with the school where the juvenile is enrolled for the purposes of protecting the safety of the student or others or to assist in providing appropriate educational opportunities for the student or others.\textsuperscript{214} The principal of the school must destroy or return any documents relating to the juvenile record once they are no longer needed or the student no longer attends the school.\textsuperscript{215}

The school principal should be notified by juvenile court officials when a delinquency petition alleges a felony offense, the juvenile is transferred to adult court, the court reaches a disposition or dismissal in a case alleging delinquency for a felony offense, or when a disposition is modified or vacated in such a case.\textsuperscript{216}

Schools can suspend or expel students based on the notification by the juvenile court of a pending delinquency petition if the act violates school rules or if the juvenile is considered a danger to himself or others.\textsuperscript{217} The school must maintain the required confidentiality of the records.\textsuperscript{218} Suspensions of periods greater than ten days may be appealed.\textsuperscript{219}

Collateral consequences affecting access to higher education for an individual with a juvenile record vary from institution to institution. The Common Application, used by some schools, requires students to disclose and explain any past disciplinary violations, misdemeanors, felonies, or other crimes.\textsuperscript{220} Although juvenile history is not requested on the applications, some universities and colleges in North Carolina ask questions that could lead to the disclosure of juvenile adjudication information. Questions that could lead to disclosure include whether the applicant has ever taken responsibility for a crime, whether there are criminal charges pending, whether the applicant has been disciplined at school, or whether the applicant has ever been on probation.221

The sixteen schools in the University of North Carolina system ask standardized questions regarding any prior criminal history. Each of the colleges has a committee review the applications which indicate prior criminal records and determine admission status.222 This process was implemented following two separate murders in 2004 of UNC-Wilmington students each by individuals who were either current or former students and who lied about or failed to disclose their criminal histories.223

Collateral Consequences Relating to Public Benefits & Privileges

The arrest or adjudication of a juvenile can lead to eviction from public housing. The housing authority has broad power to evict a household based on the act of one tenant or a guest of any of the tenants. Eviction is an option if a tenant or guest engages in criminal activity that is threatening to the health and safety of others, is threatening to others’ peaceful enjoyment of the premises, or involves illegal drugs.224

A major consequence of a juvenile adjudication is the possibility of losing driving privileges. In North Carolina, a juvenile court may prevent a youth from obtaining a driver’s license for as long as the juvenile court has jurisdiction over that individual.225

FLORIDA

Understanding the Justice System

Florida criminal offenders are considered juveniles if the offender is under eighteen years old.226 The circuit court in Florida handles the proceedings in which a juvenile is alleged to have committed a delinquent act or violated the law.227

Florida statutes define a “child who has been found to have committed a delinquent act” as a child who is found by a court to have committed a violation of law or be in direct or indirect contempt of court prior to his eighteenth birthday, with the exception of when the juvenile court has terminated jurisdiction by transferring the case to adult court.228 The Florida statute also indicates that a finding of delinquency is not considered a conviction and that the juvenile is not considered to have been found 222 Closing the Doors to Higher Education: Another Collateral Consequence of a Criminal Conviction, Center for Community Alternatives, by Marsha Weissman, Alan Rosenthal, and Patricia Warth.

The adjudication should not impose the civil disabilities ordinarily imposed by a conviction or crime.\textsuperscript{229}

In some cases under Florida law juveniles can be tried as adults. There are several ways for a juvenile to be transferred to adult court. These are direct filing, voluntary waiver, involuntary discretion waiver, and involuntary mandatory waiver.

The state attorney has discretion to charge a juvenile as an adult by using a direct filing to give adult court jurisdiction. In order to direct file, the child must be at least fourteen at the time of the act and charged with committing a serious felony such as arson, robbery, kidnapping, murder, manslaughter, or another of enumerated offense.\textsuperscript{230} If the child is fourteen or fifteen at the time the act was committed the state attorney has discretion to file to determine whether to direct file.\textsuperscript{231} If the juvenile is sixteen or seventeen and charged with one of the enumerated crimes and previously adjudicated delinquent for a felony, it is mandatory that the state attorney direct file.\textsuperscript{232}

Where the state attorney has discretion, this action is usually taken when the juvenile has a substantial criminal history or is considered dangerous. This option is also utilized for juveniles who are considered unable to be rehabilitated by the juvenile rehabilitation system.\textsuperscript{233}

Voluntary waiver occurs when a juvenile, with support of a guardian, demands to be tried as an adult. The case is transferred for criminal prosecution and the juvenile is treated as an adult from that point forward. The juvenile will be treated as an adult for any subsequent charges as well.\textsuperscript{234}

Involuntary discretion waiver occurs when the state attorney files a motion requesting the court transfer the juvenile to adult court for criminal prosecution. The child must be fourteen years of age or older at the time of the violation of the law.\textsuperscript{235}

Involuntary mandatory waiver occurs in two situations. The first is if the child was at least fourteen years old and has been previously adjudicated delinquent for a felony. The other situation is if the child was at least fourteen years old and had adjudication withheld for three prior felony offenses, one of which involved the use of a firearm or violence against a person.\textsuperscript{236}

A waiver hearing is held in circuit court, which allows the judge to consider all the evidence presented and to determine whether the case should remain in circuit court or be transferred to adult court. The judge can consider many factors in determining the appropriate jurisdiction of the case.\textsuperscript{237}

The Florida Statutes do not require administrators of the juvenile justice system to notify juvenile offenders or their guardians of the collateral consequences of juvenile records. A juvenile could have many interactions with the juvenile court administrators, including his own attorney, and not learn the ramifications of a juvenile adjudication.

Most juvenile records in Florida are automatically expunged after a period of time. There is also a petition process for those whose records would not be automatically expunged. An individual can also petition to have the records expunged prior to the automatic expungement. There is no requirement of the juvenile justice system to inform the juvenile offenders or their guardians of the opportunity to seek expungement of those records.

Treatment of Juvenile Records

In some cases, juvenile adjudications are considered part of the individual’s record.\(^{238}\) This means that a prior juvenile adjudication can lead to harsher sentences for an adult conviction. Any juvenile dispositions committed within five years of the primary offense are included in the prior record if the act would have been considered a crime had the offender been an adult at the time.\(^{239}\)

Collection of fingerprints and photographs is another potential collateral consequence of having a juvenile record. Upon arrest, juveniles charged with crimes that would be a felony if committed by an adult are fingerprinted and photographed by the local Juvenile Assessment Center (JAC).\(^{240}\) The fingerprints must be submitted to the Department of Law Enforcement (DLE).\(^{241}\) Information regarding juveniles is stored in the Juvenile Justice Information System, the department’s electronic information system, which is used to gather and store information on youth having contact with the DLE.\(^{242}\)

All information obtained pertaining to juvenile adjudications is considered confidential. Per Florida Statute, it may be disclosed only to the authorized personnel of the court, the DLE, the Department of Corrections, the Parole Commission, law enforcement agents, school superintendents, any licensed professional or licensed community agency representative participating in the assessment or treatment of the juvenile, and others entitled by statute to receive that information, or upon an order of the court.\(^{243}\) Information regarding arrests and adjudications must be shared with the juvenile’s school. Within each county, the sheriff, the chiefs of police, the district school superintendent, and the DLE enter into an interagency agreement for the purpose of sharing information about juvenile offenders among all parties. The agencies must maintain the confidentiality of the information.\(^{244}\)

The confidentiality requirement does not apply under several scenarios. These include if the child has been charged with a crime that if committed by an adult would be a felony, has committed three or more violations of the law which if committed by an adult would be misdemeanors, is transferred to the adult system,\(^{245}\) or is fourteen or fifteen years old and is charged with committing a serious crime including arson, sexual battery, robbery, kidnapping, murder, manslaughter, armed burglary, and possessing or discharging a weapon or firearm on school property. There is an extensive statutory list of exceptions including many other serious crimes. Information regarding these crimes is not protected by the confidentiality requirement of the juvenile justice system and is public information. Being charged with one of these crimes also gives the state attorney discretion to transfer jurisdiction of the juvenile to adult court.

Records in the custody of the DLE regarding juveniles are not available to the public. An order is required from the Secretary of Juvenile Justice to review the records. It is at the secretary’s discretion to allow access but a sufficient reason for access must be supplied. Additionally, the records can be disclosed to other employees of the DLE when required to perform their official duties, persons authorized by DLE rules, or upon request to the Department of Corrections.

The clerk of court must keep juvenile records separate from other records of circuit court. The records are not available to the public. Exceptions to this rule include a child and his guardian, their attorneys, law enforcement agencies, the Department of Juvenile Justice, the parole commission, the Department of Corrections, the Justice Administrative Commission, and by court order.

Expunging and Sealing Delinquency Files or Records

In Florida, most juvenile records are automatically destroyed after a period of time. Juveniles classified as serious offenders will have their records expunged when the individual turns twenty-six years old. Juveniles not classified as serious offenders will have their criminal history record expunged when the individual turns twenty-four years old. There is an exception to this rule if after the individual is eighteen years old, he is charged with or convicted of a forcible felony prior to the destruction of his juvenile record. In that case the juvenile record is merged with the adult record and maintained as part of the adult record. The other exception occurs if the minor is adjudicated as an adult for a forcible felony. The juvenile’s record merges with the adult record when he is adjudicated as an adult.

Although Florida offers automatic expungement at age twenty-four or twenty-six, it is possible to petition the court to have the juvenile record sealed or expunged earlier. An individual may want to pursue this option, particularly in light of the collateral consequences that could impact education, employment, and housing opportunities prior to automatic expungement. One consideration however, is that individuals are only allowed to seal or expunge a record one time in a lifetime. The court has sole discretion to decide whether a record should be sealed or expunged. Statute dictates the sealing and expungement process. An individual must first get a certificate of eligibility for expungement from the DLE, and must have completed all court supervision applicable to the criminal activity. The certificate must be submitted with the completed application for expungement.

255 Id.
If the petition is approved, the criminal history record must be physically destroyed by any criminal justice agency maintaining a copy.\textsuperscript{257} As an exception, the DLE will retain a copy of the record which will be confidential and not available except under court order.\textsuperscript{258} Agencies required to expunge their records may keep a notation that the record was expunged.\textsuperscript{259}

Once a record is expunged individuals are not required to reveal information regarding that proceeding and may treat the act as if it never occurred.\textsuperscript{260} There are several exceptions to this rule that require an individual to reveal information pertaining to the expunged record. The exceptions are if the person is a candidate for employment with a criminal justice agency, a defendant in a criminal prosecution, petitions for the sealing of criminal records, applies for admission to the Florida Bar, seeks to work with or in an agency that serving children, the disabled, or the elderly, including schools, or seeks employment at a seaport.\textsuperscript{261} Violation of this provision is considered a first degree misdemeanor.\textsuperscript{262}

Juvenile records are not publicly available and therefore not generally available to employers. Juvenile adjudications are not considered convictions and thus do not need to be revealed on job applications requesting information regarding convictions. As previously discussed, there are job applications where an individual would need to reveal an arrest, even of an expunged record.

Individuals should always tell the truth on employment applications and read what is being asked very carefully. If asked about convictions, it may not be necessary to reveal information about juvenile adjudications. If the employer asks about arrests information may need to be included regarding juvenile offenses. Keep in mind some employers have access to full criminal records, including juvenile records.

Collateral Consequences Affecting Elementary & Secondary Education Students

As indicated earlier, information regarding juvenile arrests and adjudications are shared with the juvenile’s school.\textsuperscript{263} The principal of the school must abide by the statutorily defined confidentiality requirements but can use the information for other purposes without disseminating the information from the record.\textsuperscript{264}

A student can be suspended for acts which substantially disrupt the orderly conduct of school; vague language that allows schools to consider a broad range of actions.\textsuperscript{265} Schools are also allowed to suspend a student who is charged with a felony or delinquent act that would be a felony if it had been committed by an adult, regardless of where the incident occurs.\textsuperscript{266} The school must show that the charge has a negative impact on the educational program, discipline, or welfare of the school.\textsuperscript{267} Although juvenile history is not requested on the applications, some universities and colleges ask questions that could lead to the disclosure of juvenile adjudication information.

Collateral consequences affecting access to higher education for an individual with a juvenile record vary from institution to institution. The Common Application, used by some schools, requires students to disclose and explain past disciplinary violations, misdemeanors, felonies, or other crimes. Questions that potentially reveal information about adjudications include whether the applicant has ever taken responsibility for a crime, whether there are criminal charges pending, whether the applicant has been disciplined at school, or if the applicant has ever been on probation.

Collateral Consequences Relating to Public Benefits & Privileges

As previously noted, the arrest or adjudication of a juvenile can lead to eviction from public housing. Under Florida law, the housing authority has the discretion to evict or bar applicants from public housing based on the act of one tenant. This includes applicants or family members who have been convicted of criminal activity or criminal activity which may adversely affect the health, safety, or welfare of other tenants.

A major consequence of a juvenile adjudication is the possibility of losing driving privileges. In Florida, a person under twenty-one years old found guilty of possession of alcohol can have his driver’s license revoked for up to twelve months, and will have their license automatically suspended for six months if caught driving while intoxicated. Driving privileges can be suspended for truancy and will not be reinstated until the student attends school for thirty consecutive days.

Moving Forward

There is much room for improvement in the juvenile justice system, especially with respect to reducing the impact of collateral consequences. It is particularly concerning that there are no requirements that juveniles be notified of the possible collateral consequences of delinquency adjudications. Changing that policy is an improvement that can quickly and easily implemented. There are many other actions that could be pursued to assist those in the juvenile justice system.

The first step states should take is to implement “Know Your Rights” policies. Since juvenile adjudications are not intended to be punishments, but opportunities for rehabilitation, states should move towards lessening the impacts of a juvenile adjudication on individuals. Each state should require notification of potential collateral consequences and the expungement process at the time of adjudication. Judges could be required as part of the disposition process to inform the juvenile of the implications of the sentence. This information could be reinforced in a pamphlet or other handout that is provided to the individual by various agents throughout the juvenile justice process (counselors, probation officers, etc.).

273 Id.
Every state should implement an automatic expungement process that results in all juvenile records being expunged. States without such a policy can model theirs on one of the existing policies in use by other states, including those described here. The goal should be to have all juvenile records automatically expunged as early as possible. Currently many states with automatic expungement processes wait until the individual is in their mid-20s to expunge the adjudication. By this time, a person has already been negatively impacted by having to reveal information on college or job applications.

In the absence of an automatic expungement process, all states should create a simple expungement form, such as Delaware’s, to make it easier for individuals to independently navigate the process. Having a form that can be easily completed by the individual and submitted to the court could remove some of the mystery surrounding the expungement process. This would also make the process more accessible, especially considering the lack of available legal representation to assist in the process.

State Bar Associations, law schools and youth advocacy organizations should be encouraged and supported in developing pro bono projects and other programs to provide community outreach and education around the impacts of juvenile adjudications, and direct assistance in pursuing expungement of juvenile records.

State legislative changes should be pursued to further limit the use, disclosure, or access to juvenile records. Many college and university applications have questions that require the applicant to reveal information that is otherwise protected as a juvenile record. Laws could be implemented to stop colleges and universities from circumventing the protections built into the restrictions on dissemination of juvenile delinquency records by asking about discipline at school or arrests regardless of the outcome.

Finally, additional legislative and judicial changes should be adopted to maximize the opportunity for youth to stay in the juvenile justice systems and not moved into the criminal courts. As previously noted, juvenile delinquency proceedings are not criminal convictions and the youths are not considered criminals. Usually juvenile records are not publically available and in some states are automatically expunged. Criminal records follow a person for their entire lives and are much more difficult to expunge or seal. A criminal record can negatively impact education, employment, and housing opportunities for a person’s entire life. Any statutory changes which can further limit the circumstances in which youth are transferred to adult court will be critical in helping minimize the collateral consequences for juveniles in the legal system.

WRITING

Short Answer  Please briefly elaborate on one of your extracurricular activities or work experiences in the space below or on an attached sheet (150 words or fewer).

Personal Essay  Please write an essay (250 words minimum) on a topic of your choice or on one of the options listed below, and attach it to your application before submission. Please indicate your topic by checking the appropriate box. This personal essay helps us become acquainted with you as a person and student, apart from courses, grades, test scores, and other objective data. It will also demonstrate your ability to organize your thoughts and express yourself.

NOTE: Your Common Application essay should be the same for all colleges. Do not customize it in any way for individual colleges. Colleges that want customized essay responses will ask for them on a supplement form.

☐  Evaluate a significant experience, achievement, risk you have taken, or ethical dilemma you have faced and its impact on you.
☐  Discuss some issue of personal, local, national, or international concern and its importance to you.
☐  Indicate a person who has had a significant influence on you, and describe that influence.
☐  Describe a character in fiction, a historical figure, or a creative work (as in art, music, science, etc.) that has had an influence on you, and explain that influence.
☐  A range of academic interests, personal perspectives, and life experiences add much to the educational mix. Give your personal background, describe an experience that illustrates what you would bring to the diversity in a college community or an encounter that demonstrated the importance of diversity to you.
☐  Topic of your choice.

Additional Information  If there is any additional information you’d like to provide regarding special circumstances, additional qualifications, etc., please do so in the space below or on an attached sheet.

Disciplinary History

☐ Have you ever been found responsible for a disciplinary violation at any educational institution you have attended from 9th grade (or the international equivalent) forward, whether related to academic misconduct or behavioral misconduct, that resulted in your probation, suspension, removal, dismissal, or expulsion from the institution?  ☐ Yes  ☐ No

☐ Have you ever been adjudicated guilty or convicted of a misdemeanor, felony, or other crime?  ☐ Yes  ☐ No

[Note that you are not required to answer “yes” to this question, or provide an explanation, if the criminal adjudication or conviction has been expunged, sealed, annulled, pardoned, destroyed, erased, impounded, or otherwise ordered by a court to be kept confidential.]

If you answered “yes” to either or both questions, please attach a separate sheet of paper that gives the approximate date of each incident, explains the circumstances, and reflects on what you learned from the experience.

Application Fee Payment  If this college requires an application fee, how will you be paying it?

Required Signature

☐ I certify that all information submitted in the admission process—including the application, the personal essay, any supplements, and any other supporting materials—is my own work, factually true, and honestly presented, and that these documents will become the property of the institution to which I am applying and will not be returned to me. I understand that I may be subject to a range of possible disciplinary actions, including admission revocation, expulsion, or revocation of course credit, grades, and degree should the information I have certified be false.

☐ I acknowledge that I have reviewed the application instructions for each college receiving this application. I understand that all offers of admission are conditional, pending receipt of final transcripts showing work comparable in quality to that upon which the offer was based, as well as honorable dismissal from the school.

☐ I affirm that I will send an enrollment deposit (or equivalent) to only one institution; sending multiple deposits (or equivalent) may result in the withdrawal of my admission offers from all institutions. [Note: students may send an enrollment deposit (or equivalent) to a second institution where they have been admitted from the waitlist, provided that they inform the first institution that they will no longer be enrolling.]

Ref. Rules 11C-7.006 and 11C-7.007
FDLE 40-021
GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS & INFORMATION:

1. Applicable law: Sections 943.0585 and 943.059, Florida Statutes, and Chapter 11C-7, Florida Administrative Code (FAC), govern the use of this application, for the expunction or sealing of non-judicial criminal history records by criminal justice agencies. These statutes and the implementing rules require that you obtain a Certificate of Eligibility from the Florida Department of Law Enforcement (FDLE) prior to requesting a court for an order to seal or expunge your non-judicial criminal history records, and that you provide the information required by this application process.

2. Please type or print all information, except signatures. Complete all required portions of the application and submit all required documents and the processing fee noted below, under Section A. Failure to disclose your social security number (SOC) may delay the processing time of your application. If your application is submitted without all the required information, documentation, or the processing fee, FDLE may reject your application.

3. Mailing information: Mail your completed application package and fee to the following address:

   Florida Department of Law Enforcement
   ATTN: Expunge/Seal Section
   P.O. Box 1489
   Tallahassee, Florida 32302-1489

5. Optional Personal Review of your Florida criminal history record: If you have questions about what appears in your Florida criminal history record maintained by FDLE, you may wish to obtain a Personal Review of your record from FDLE, pursuant to Chapter 11C-8, FAC, before submitting this application form. The Personal Review is optional and is not required for FDLE to process your Application for Certification of Eligibility for expunction or sealing of your record. To obtain a Personal Review, please complete and submit the enclosed FDLE Fingerprint form and a letter to FDLE at the address above. If you submit the fingerprint form and a letter for your Personal Review, please DO NOT send in the APPLICATION or the $75.00 processing fee until the Personal Review is completed; the results of your personal review may influence your decision to request the expunction or sealing of your criminal history record.

SECTION A: FOR ALL APPLICANTS

1. Complete every part of SECTION A. Make sure your signature, as the applicant, is notarized.

2. If you were given a Notice to Appear and not physically arrested for the charge(s), indicate the date of the Notice to Appear in the box marked “Date of Arrest.”

3. NON-REFUNDABLE Processing Fee: Submit with your application a money order or Cashier’s check in the amount of $75.00, made payable to the Florida Department of Law Enforcement (FDLE).

4. Submit the attached fingerprint form with your fingerprints, as part of your application packet. This form must be completed by authorized personnel at a law enforcement or criminal justice agency, using only the attached FDLE Fingerprint form. (If you have obtained a Personal Review, send the fingerprint card back with the enclosed fingerprint form, please resubmit the same form for the Expunge/Seal “Certificate of Eligibility” application.)

5. Provide a certified copy of the final disposition(s) for each of the charges you list on your application. Dispositions can usually be obtained from the office of the Clerk of Courts in the county where you were charged. For Pretrial Intervention and other Diversion programs, a certified letter of completion from the State Attorney or Statewide Prosecutor may substitute for a certified disposition. If you received probation for any of the charges, you must also submit a certified copy of the termination of your probation.

SECTION B: FOR EXPUNGE APPLICANTS ONLY

1. Submit the application to the State Attorney or Statewide Prosecutor for completion of SECTION B only if you are applying to have your records EXPUNGED. 1. The criminal history record reflects that you have been adjudicated guilty of a criminal offense or comparable ordinance violation or adjudicated delinquent for committing any felony or a misdemeanor specified in s.943.051(3)b. Certain driving violations are classified as criminal, such as DUI, reckless driving, and (with some exceptions) driving while license is suspended/canceled/revoked.

2. The criminal history record reflects that you have been adjudicated guilty of or adjudicated delinquent for committing one or more of the acts stemming from the arrest or alleged criminal activity to which the application pertains.

3. The criminal history record reflects that you have received a prior sealing or expunction of a criminal history record under s.943.0585, s.943.059, former s.893.14, former s.901.33, former s.943.058, or from any jurisdiction outside the state.

4. The criminal history record to which the application pertains relates to a violation of s.393.135, s.394.4593, s.787.025, chapter 794, s.796.03, s.800.04, s.810.14, s.817.034, s.825.1025, s.827.071, chapter 839, s.847.0135, s.847.0135, s.847.0145, s.847.0145, s.847.0145, s.847.0145, s.847.0145, s.893.135, s.893.135, s.893.135, s.893.135, a violation enumerated in s.807.041, or a violation of any offense qualifying for registration as a sexual predator under s.775.21 or for registration as a sexual offender under s.943.0435, Fla. 7. [For expunction only] The criminal history record reflects that some or all of the charges related to the arrest or criminal activity to which the application pertains were not dismissed prior to trial, adjudication, or the withholding of adjudication, if no other disqualification applies, the record would be eligible to be sealed.

PLEASE NOTE: The Governor and Cabinet of Florida, acting in the capacity of the Board of Executive Clemency, declared on June 10, 1999, that the granting of a full pardon does not remove any condition of ineligibility for sealing or expunging a criminal history record which would otherwise be imposed by a conviction or withholding of adjudication pursuant to Sections 943.0585 and 943.059, Florida Statutes, and, acting in the capacity of agency head of the Department of Law Enforcement, the Board directed FDLE to deny a Certificate of Eligibility to any person receiving a pardon who is otherwise ineligible for the sealing or expunging of the person’s criminal history record.
